Local chefs are mixing culinary influences with food native to the area and people are noticing. Jackson County's restaurants have been written up in Southern Living, Our State Magazine and the Atlanta Journal- Constitution. Be it blackberry wine, stoneground grits, sweet potato fries or seasoned collard greens, you're sure to get a taste of Western North Carolina while you're here. Many restaurants put an emphasis on organic and sustainable agriculture, bringing seasonal items to their menus. Also, with North Carolina's growing wine industry, you'll find some of the state's finest wines available on local wine lists and in stores. You can view our restaurant guide on line at www.mountainlovers.com
